Passion for Farming

A sow can bring parasites and micro-organisms from the stall with the pregnant sows along with it to the birthing pen via faecal matter stuck to its skin. The piglets can become ill from these as soon as they come into contact with the faecal matter.

A clean sow contributes to overall hygiene.

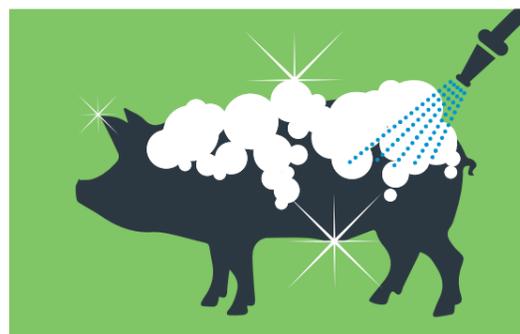

According to the GD*, washing sows before birthing should be a standard component in the practices of modern pig farming.

Research shows that 75% of sow farmers wash the sows before birthing. 80% of these sow farmers use shampoo or soap when washing them.

Washing a sow with water takes 4 minutes and faecal matter does not come off.

Washing a sow with water and soap takes 3.5 minutes and the sow comes out completely clean.

Soaking with shampoo:

- ensures that faecal matter is loosened
- makes cleaning the sows easier
- speeds up the time it takes to wash the sow
- makes that the sow ends up spick-and-span

It is important for the means used to have a cleansing as well as a protective effect for the skin.
